Description

Called "Study of a Rhino and Calf", this limited-edition sterling silver sculpture has been created in a unique collaboration between London silversmiths Grant Macdonald and acclaimed wildlife sculptor Rosamond Lloyd. The model has been meticulously crafted to celebrate British artistry and craftsmanship and raise vital awareness and funds for wildlife conservation charity, Tusk.

Limited to just ten pieces, this first sculpture bears the Queen's Platinum Jubilee Commemorative hallmark—a mark of authenticity and excellence reflecting Grant Macdonald's craftsmanship and prestigious status as a royal warrant holder. Mounted on American walnut, this piece embodies a seamless blend of elegance, heritage, and sustainable materials.

Rosamond Lloyd, celebrated for her lifelike and emotive representations of wildlife, brings her dedication to nature into every detail of the mother and calf, making the most of the master craftsmen's signature approach to silversmithing, combining traditional handcrafting methods with cutting-edge 3D printing technologies in order to deliver a piece of extraordinary precision.

Collectors and patrons interested in supporting this noble cause, and acquiring a unique testament to British craftsmanship, can reserve one of these exclusive sculptures. Each purchase contributes directly to Tusk Trust's vital conservation efforts, ensuring the protection of vulnerable species for future generations.
